

Press Release:

Kino Klassika presents A Russian Revolution Centenary Screening of the lost score for Eisenstein's masterpiece October (1928) accompanied by the London Symphony Orchestra 26th October 2017 7.30pm

The London Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Frank Strobel, will give a live performance of the score for Sergei Eisenstein's October (1928), at the UK premiere screening of a new restoration of the film on 26 October at the Barbican, presented by UK film charity, Kino Klassika Foundation. The screening takes place on the centenary of the storming of the Winter Palace, 100 years to the day after the creation of the new Soviet state. The LSO will perform a reconstruction of Edmund Meisel's lost original score for October, by Bernard Thewes.

After the worldwide success of his Battleship Potemkin (1925), Eisenstein was commissioned by the Soviet government to make a film to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the Revolution. October is an epic recreation of the storming of the Winter Palace in October 1917, the event which ultimately brought Tsarist rule to an end.

Written for the shorter German version of the film (Ten Days That Shook the World, 1928), Edmund Meisel, the composer, said his score was planned, "according to a recorded system of graduation that should underscore the plot as it unfolds." Speaking about the hugely innovative music, Frank Strobel has said, "Edmund Meisel connects images and music in a way that removes the border between direct and indirect experience, to allow the spectator to witness and experience revolutionary pathos. In October, with its noise-like and almost brutalistic soundscape – his music seems to act as a harbinger of punk and techno."

Eisenstein and his team were allowed to film throughout the Hermitage (Winter Palace), and even to raise and lower the famous bridges of St Petersburg to recreate the battleship Aurora's attack, the event which signalled the start of the assault on the Winter Palace, and the beginning of the October Revolution. October marked the end point of the idealised and uncensored Soviet film-making of the 1920s; Joseph Stalin famously removed sequences involving Trotsky from the final cut, when he first viewed the film.

October is widely seen as the high point of Eisenstein's exploration of 'intellectual montage', a technique in which connected but often opposing images are edited together on screen to create a particular intellectual response. The film occupies a unique place in Sergei Eisenstein's work: the highly personal and controversial images used in montage led to widespread banning, with the first screenings in Britain only taking place in 1934.

Ralph Fiennes, Kino Klassika patron said, "Russian cinema and Sergei Eisenstein in particular have been in my life since childhood. I remember clearly the first time I watched October and being dazzled by its sheer scale and inventiveness. Eisenstein was a genius and a hooligan. He invented the language of cinema. Looking back after 100 years I marvel at his revolutionary cinematography. Eisenstein created films which connect to everyone, making each one of us a richer person."

About The Kino Klassika Eisenstein Project

This landmark collection of screenings, artistic commissions, exhibitions, publications and academic research aims to re-examine Sergei Eisenstein through the lens of contemporary cultural and film practice culminating in the publication of Eisenstein on Paper in partnership with Thames & Hudson publishers written by the Russian film scholar Naum Kleiman with a foreword by Martin Scorsese.

About Eisenstein on Paper

This book presents, for the first time ever, 500 of the very best and previously unpublished graphic works by cinema's master of film. Created in collaboration with the RGALI - the Russian State Archive of Literature and the Arts - and with the support of Kino Klassika, this book traces Eisenstein's extraordinary life and career through the distinctive yet evolving styles of his drawings, from early childhood sketches to set and costume designs, and from surreal psychoanalytic drawings to late abstract works.

Foremost Eisenstein scholar Naum Kleiman brings fresh and incredible insights into the motivation and purpose of the drawings, and reflects upon excerpts from Eisenstein's own discursive texts. Comparative frames from Eisenstein's movies, together with a biographical introduction by film historian, curator and broadcaster Ian Christie and a foreword by Martin Scorsese, completes the revelatory and arresting picture.
