

Tale of Tales (1979) by Yuri Norstein

Jerzy Petersburski's tango The Last Sunday was released in Poland in 1935. Shortly after, it was translated into Russian as The Wearied Sun and released to immediate popularity in the USSR. Yuri Norstein was born in 1941, and has stated that he does not remember the war, 'But I remember the feeling: the feeling in the corridor, in a room, the frost, the smell of frost, the smell of snow and the tango, The Wearied Sun that could be heard everywhere, almost as a national anthem.' The lyrics detail the final meeting of two lovers before they part ways forever. Nostalgic and brooding, it earned the nickname 'The Suicide Tango'.

The recording of The Wearied Sun used in this animation crackles, much as an old or over-played record would. Combined with the ephemeral, unfocused imagery, it gives the impression that one is listening through time. In a heartbreaking sequence, women dance with their partners to the tango. The song stops, jerkily and abruptly. The men holding the women vanish; leaving the women frozen in position, their arms empty. The men return, their cloaked backs and helmet clad heads visible as they march into war and past the frozen image of their lovers. As they march, the seasons change, in shorthand for the passing of time. The music changes too, to a more sinister and authoritative song. Letters fly through the sky and are caught by the women. Fragments of text, saying things like 'Your husband...,' 'Faithful to military honour...' and 'Was buried...' are shown over the image of black bread and vodka. It is a Russian mourning tradition to leave these items out for the dead. This simple and imaginative sequence highlights the strange relationship between action and inaction, for the women remain entirely still whilst the men march; as well as the suddenness of conflict and its definitive consequences.

This meditation on loss, through animation's capacities and combined with Norstein's specific artistry has an entirely devastating impact on viewers. In 1984, The Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences called Tale of Tales the best animation ever made. Mimicking human memory, Norstein's film undertakes a grand and unique task. One that has resulted in comparisons between Tale of Tales and Andrei Tarkovsky's Mirror (1973). An unusual and personal goal for any filmmaker, and arguably even more rare for an animator, he succeeded in producing a film that has been pored over, to establish the meaning of the non-linear plot in the same obsessive way Tarkovsky's films are interrogated.

There are three intertwined plot lines. The sequences for these are not separated but interspersed and the perspective is switched at random. These are memory, the present and an idealised world. The one common denominator is the little wolf who watches all. These gorgeous, ephemeral sequences communicate with each other in the most tender and heartbreaking way. The derelict present showcases a nostalgia for childhood, and of family intimacy in the era of communal apartments. This romanticisation of his childhood exists knowingly alongside the cultural trauma and personal tragedy of those years. Certainly, his early memories are informed by it. This is exemplified most heartbreakingly by the images of a baby, suckling at a breast. Norstein has explained the genesis of this image. His aunt came to live with his family, pregnant and recently widowed. Her baby died after two weeks. In the kitchen he would watch her draw the milk her body was still producing from her breast. By animating a suckling baby, all three strands collide as he immortalises an idealised moment in personal memory that ended in tragedy.

Norstein has established his film expresses the phenomenon of 'pre memory'. Something he describes as existing in all of us: the sensation of intimately knowing something we have not experienced. This strange primordial sense is perhaps represented by the wolf, the spectator to the film's events. But instead of being a scary antagonist, the wolf is small, vulnerable and sweet. An ancient symbol of our preternatural senses in a loveable and childlike form. The only moment the wolf truly participates in, is when he sings to the baby he finds. The song is, ironically, a little ditty about being taken into the forest by a wolf. In this moment the self aware irony of Norstein's film is pulled together as the sinister and the comforting collide.

Yuri Norstein

Yuri Norstein is a Soviet/ Russian director. The animator was born in 1941 in the Penza Oblast and raised in a Moscow suburb. He is best known for his animation shorts. The most loved and famous of these is Hedgehog in the Fog, which is considered a classic in Russia and a favourite of adults and children alike. Known to be a perfectionist, who is entirely uncompromising on quality, he has earned the title, 'The Golden Snail': Norstein has been working on an adaptation of Nikolai Gogol's Overcoat since 1981. With a distinctive style which departs from the typical lines and colours of animation, his films are masterful and full of depth. Norstein uses imagery and the unique abilities of animations to delve into the subconscious and cultural memory.

About Red Front

Marking VE Day and the end of the war on the Eastern Front, May 9th, this season of remarkable and rarely screened films includes works from famed directors Aleksei Germann and Andrei Konchalovsky, contemporary director Sergei Loznitsa, female director Tatyana Lioznova, as well as Yuri Norstein, widely considered to be the greatest animator of all time.

Screenings will take place online every Tuesday and Saturday, from Saturday 9 to Saturday 30 May 2020. Reframed in short order, since cinemas have gone dark, Red Front is a unique co-operation between Kino Klassika, the Institut français du Royaume-Uni and partners and directors of cinemas and studios in the UK and Russia. Supported by the Russian Embassy in London, Lenfilm, Soyuzmultfilm, Gorky Film and others, it replaces a planned cinema season in London, Bristol, Manchester and beyond.

WWII had effects that range well into this century, but the level and extremity of the loss suffered by the Soviet Union had significant social impact. The films we are showing are made by innovative, modern directors across various genres. We have included a diverse range of style and narrative to show the various ways film has been used to commemorate, remind and heal. Our mission is to shine a light on these rarely seen, contemporary masterpieces in an act of remembrance for the past and recognition of the present. As always with Kino Klassika screenings, each film will be accompanied by specially commissioned programme notes.

About Kino Klassika Foundation

Kino Klassika creates programmes of film restorations, publications, art commissions and events to educate audiences about classic Russian language and Eastern cinema. This includes a 2-year programme to spotlight the pioneering work of filmmaker Sergei Eisenstein, our first restoration projects including Hakob Havnatanyan, Arabesques on the Ploshmani Theme and Jirdan (1969). We have recently completed Melodia! Discovering Musicals from Russia and the Caucasus, a screening season in partnership with the British Film Institute, Institut Francais, Bristol Watershed and Broadway Nottingham. The program celebrated the diversity and complexity of Soviet, Russian and Caucasian musicals. It gave UK audiences a unique opportunity to explore an undiscovered musical tradition.

Kino Klassika's trustees are Professor Ian Christie, Daniel Jowell QC, Roger Munnings CBE and Justine Waddell. The patron of Kino Klassika is Ralph Fiennes.

The Kino Klassika Team

This screening could not happen without the unstinting support of the Kino Klassika team: Joseph Andreyev, Nathan Dampier, Tatiana Isaeva, Zoryana Mischiy, Olja Mlljevic, Seraphina Paisey and Talitha Piggott.
